LONDON, May 9.

BY an authentic list of the vessels that go from Liverpoole to Africa, their number amounts to 88, which trade for 25,720 slaves yearly. The company of merchants belonging to Liverpoole, who trade to Africa, (established by act of parliament) consists of 101. There are 135 merchants free of the African company in London, and 157 in Bristol; yet their trade is not so extensive as that of the merchants in Liverpoole. There are 106 vessels belonging to that town, employed in the West India and American trade; 28 that commonly take freight from Liverpoole to several parts of Europe; 122 that use the coasting and Irish trade; and upwards of 80 river sloops, imployed in the salt trade, &c Burthen from 40 to 70 tons.

The commerce of Liverpoole has increased within these few years, more than that of any other port of Great-Britain. By the late war it was a considerable gainer; the harbor being situated so near the mouth of the North Channel, between Ice and and Scotland (a passage very little known or frequented by the enemy) afforded many conveniencies to the merchants of Liverpoole, denied to those of other ports; which invited numbers of strangers from different parts to settle there Since the peace their trade has not been so brisk as formerly; but it appears by the custom-house books to be much revived.

CHARLES-TOWN, August 20.

The Catawba's have been very little annoyed by any Enemy since they made Peace with the Five Nations; but lately, the French Indians called Caughnawagee's, have killed and carried off 14 or 15 of them: The Catawba's we doubt not will soon repay them in their own Coin, and with Interest; a Week ago they brought Five of their Enemies Scalps to Town, and we hear of another Engagement since, in which Six Catawba Men and Two Boys fell upon Twenty of the Enemy, and killed Eighteen upon the Spot, with the Loss of but One Man.
